Tonight, CUNY invites Lawrence Weschler—one of the most engaging and omnivorous writers on art—to moderate its ongoing series of talks on collaborations between writers and visual artists. The discussion will be between poet Wayne Koestenbaum and painter Amy Sillman, who wrote the recently-released Amy Sillman—Works on Paper together. Anyone unfamiliar with "the Wesch" is strongly encouraged to attend for a useful lesson in how to think and talk about art smartly, without a whiff of pretension. — Tayt Harlin
